

FRANCESCA BARAN U.K. – AUGUST, 2015 THAILAND TEACHER REPORT

I was coming to the end of my degree at university, when I was worried about going into full time employment before getting the chance to properly experience and explore the world! I looked up many ways that would allow me to travel and came across www.EnglishCampsThailand.com and ThaiJobs. After speaking to one of the reps that help run the organisation I was immediately hooked as it was a way for me to explore South East Asia whilst still earning money.

I didn't have much experience with teaching, and I had no idea what Thailand would have to offer. However, I was not disappointed. I was given a thorough orientation by English Camps Thailand, in Thailand and had a fabulous time doing the Camp Thailand Adventures including elephant conservation. Camp Thailand Adventures is owned by English for Fun which is also the parent company of English Camps Thailand. As for teaching, despite not speaking the language (Thai), the fellow teachers and staff at the school I teach at are always there for guidance and to answer any questions I may have. Teaching is so much fun!

The Staff at English Camps Thailand are so helpful and they will ease you into your first day of teaching, with enough ideas for lesson plans to make your first day not so scary. I was taken to meet the Director of the school and walk around the school grounds before I was given my first class to teach.

Once I arrived in Thailand I did not have to worry too much about attaining my work permit, as the English Camps Thailand program helped me with that. You can enjoy teaching without the worry of having enough money to last

Elephant Conservation in Surin Province, Thailand

I am located in Loei city in Loei Province. This part of Thailand is absolutely stunning, with it being right in the hills and mountain region. On the weekends I explore the town, go on hikes in the hills, or go swimming in the lakes. You have a fun week of teaching, then you are free to explore Thailand as much as you like on weekends or school holidays.

Teaching has definitely been a way to experience local towns and culture in Thailand. Especially the temples which are breathtakingly beautiful, and you will see them everywhere you go.

I would definitely recommend English Camps Thailand and Camp Thailand Adventures as they provide amazing opportunities and offer so much.
